Döberitz - Elstal

1. Colonel Bochko was CO of the GA division at Akersha, 26 kilometers from Odessa.
 - b. The CO is Vologodsky, not Bologodsky.

2. Finsterwalde

The old designation of the bomber corps is Three; the new one is not known to source.

- b. The separate communications company is equipped with four mobile radio units and consists of three platoons. There is one platoon per unit, with the 34th spare (sic). One platoon is located at Finsterwalde, another at Dessau. The location of the third is not known to source.
- c. The communications battalion is a separate battalion, responsible to army but attached to corps. It maintains telephone communications only.

3. Wittstock

- a. The 9th Jet Fighter Division headquarters is in Wittstock. Its third regiment was in the process of organization early in 1950 and was to be based at Rangsdorf. The 95th separate Air Technical Division is divided into battalions which service the regiments of the fighter corps. Chief of the 95th Division food warehouse is Major Runstein.
- b. One fighter regiment has the APO 10130 and is serviced by a separate air technical battalion, APO 62331 (?). The other fighter regiment has the APO 40500 (?) and is serviced by a separate air technical battalion, APO 62333 (?). CO of one of the battalions is Major Niktenko.

6. Brandenburg

The 355 and 356 AA are battalions, not companies. Both are equipped with radar. [REDACTED] such battalion is located in Stendal.

7. Schönwalde

- b. Designation of the regiment is the 886th Separate Long Range Reconnaissance Regiment. It is responsible to the Air Forces, Moscow, but is attached to the 24th Air Army. Each squad has ten, not eleven planes. The regimental headquarters has two planes, however, so that the figure of twenty-two planes for the total complement is correct.

8. Strausberg

The correct designation is the Central Air Technical Warehouse. Its stores consist of spare aircraft parts and auto equipment, tools, flight gear, clothing and ammunition. Its mission is to supply the aircraft equipment and flight personnel requirements of the 24th Air Army. This does not include the 886th Reconnaissance Regiment.
